Cracks in the Crystal Ball

Article Summary by Brent Barker, CA, CFP

One of life's mysteries in the financial markets is that many still believe a successful investment strategy can be built around forecasting; this despite the road being littered with the corpses of those who got it wrong.

In February of this year, 24 of 27 market economists, polled by Bloomberg, forecast that the Reserve Bank of Australia would cut its benchmark official cash rate by 0.25% to 4.0%. The rationale seemed clear enough with many well reasoned responses. A reporter from the Sydney Morning Herald quoted "the interest rate cut was a good as certain." Yet in this case the Central Bank kept rates on hold as they felt they could wait another month to see how World events panned out. The effects were dramatic; the Australian dollar took off, reaching its highest level in six months against the US dollar. Share prices eased and bond yields rose. Needless to say the market economists then began to alter their predictions going forward.

For everyday investors, a couple of lessons come from this episode. Firstly, there is little evidence market professionals are any better at forecasting the prices of securities, commodities, interest rates or currencies than anyone else. For instance, a global fund manager felt like 'crying in his beer' from his March 2011 decision to dump most of his fund's US government bonds because interest rates were unsustainably low.

Secondly, trying to time the markets is a pretty tough job. Consider strategists and forecasters trying to pick the change in performance of bonds versus equities or government bonds versus corporate bonds, or value stocks versus growth stocks. In fact, few (if any) people seem to get it consistently right.

The third is that it doesn't really matter how strong the fundamental case is for an interest rate change, a lower currency, a higher stock price, events have a way of messing up your logic. Lastly, you don't really need any of this fundamental analysis to build long-term wealth. Markets are unpredictable because news is unpredictable. The best approach is to structure a diversified portfolio that is built to your goals and risk appetite, across and within asset classes. It's not exciting, but it works!!

EDITORIAL

The Fraser Financial AIMs

By Colleen Barker – Vernon

As you may recall, we first introduced our FFG AIMs in the fall of 2010. These AIMs are our commitment to our clients and staff about the way that we want to 'do business'. Over the past year, we have spent time discussing what each of the AIMs mean to us and our staff. Now we would like to take it one step further and start to tell our clients what each of these AIMs means in the way that we conduct day to day operations.

In this issue, you will see the first AIM – "We AIM to be responsible and prudent stewards of our client's assets and put their interests FIRST in all matters." – outlined with respect to commissions and DSC fees. We decided to focus on fees first because our clients are asking "Why don't you advertise how you are different from other financial institutions?"

Over the next few newsletter issues, we will cover the other four AIMs and ultimately add this information to our website at www.fraserfinancial.com. I hope that you enjoy our new Book Review column and the article such as "Cracks in the Crystal Ball" as we intend to continue our mission to provide you with 'food for thought'.

Millionaire Teacher

Book review by Brent Barker, CA, CFP (Vernon)

Andrew Hallam's book is an easy read that presents nine rules that most of us never learned in school. For the most part his nine rules are very simplistic and easy to follow; the question really becomes are we prepared to follow them?

Rule 1 addresses how we spend our money. Do we spend more than we earn, are we saving for retirement, are we paying more for a car than the average millionaire?

Rule 2 is one we've all heard at some point in our lives; invest early and let compounding work for you.

Rules 3, 4, 5 and 6 outline Andrew's investment philosophy and the method by which he was able to become a millionaire. Among these are: make use of low-cost index funds, understand market psychology and don't try to time the market, simply spend time in the market, build a balanced portfolio and ensure that your equity portion is exposed to the world market.

Rules 7 and 8 give advice on choosing an investment advisor and how to stay clear of investment schemes and scams.

Rule 9 is for the investor who still believes they can outperform the market and predict the winners. Andrew says if you really insist on trying to pick individual stocks, then do it with a small percentage of your portfolio and model your investments after a mentor like Warren Buffet.

Andrew Hallam's book outlines the basics of good investment philosophy and sound arguments for why his approach to becoming a millionaire worked. This book should be on every investor's shelf as a reminder of the long-term nature of investing, the need for diversification and behavior pitfalls to avoid.

If you have questions about index investing, please see one of our advisors at The Fraser Financial Group to discuss it further.

FFG AIMS: We prefer not to charge a commission when investing your money!

FFG AIM#1: We AIM to be responsible and prudent stewards of our client's assets and to put their interests FIRST in all matters.

What do we mean by not charging commissions?

You can pay Front-end commissions of 0% to 5% which is deducted from your investment capital.

➔ We chose 0%.

OR You can have a Deferred Sales Charge (DSC) schedule where you pay a surrender fee if you take too much capital out during the first six or seven years because of the upfront commission paid to the advisor.

➔ We avoid these DSC fees on any deposits by our clients. This approach removes any fee bias in our recommendations and gives our clients maximum flexibility.

It's one of the many ways we put your interests FIRST!

Insurance - Did you know?

Mortgage Insurance – Do you want to cover your mortgage or much more?

By Kate Hart, CHS, Surrey Office

Lending Institutions	FFG
Amount of coverage is usually declining with the declining balance of the mortgage	The amount of coverage never declines unless YOU change it.
Tied into your mortgage – not transferable, if you sell and buy a new house or refinance with another lender you have to start all over again with the new mortgage/ insurance and you may or may not qualify	Coverage can be for mortgage, car loans, lines of credit – whatever your needs are. And it is completely transferable because it is not tied to anything but YOU
If you die only the outstanding amount owing on your mortgage is paid out to the lending institution – your beneficiary receives nothing	If you die the total amount of the death benefit is paid to your beneficiary, one that YOU choose, tax free to use however they see fit
Rarely are the premiums cheaper and coverage is not always adequate to cover all areas of life and rates increase as you get older	Term can be converted to permanent insurance which can last your entire life without having to go through medical assessments
Once your mortgage is repaid you lose all your life insurance coverage as it is tied to the mortgage	Premiums are separate from the mortgage – as long as premiums are paid YOU are covered regardless if the mortgage is repaid
Lending institutions sales people are in most cases not licensed life insurance advisors. Their role is to have you fill out the application and get you to sign	The Fraser Financial Group are fully licensed Advisors, we have access to various insurance carriers to best suit your needs
